In 1978 Jerzy Strzetelski and Zygmunt Mazur from the Institute of English Philology at the Jagiellonian University organised the first of what was to become a triennial international conference. April Conference Fifteen will continue the tradition of bringing together scholars working in various fields of English and American Studies, including literature, general and applied linguistics, translation and cultural studies, teaching of English as a foreign language, and other related topics. The theme of this year's conference is 'Humanity/Humanities.'

When Wilhelm Dilthey published his seminal work in the modern humanities, Introduction to the Human Sciences (1883), his hopes were to outline the future methods and objects of study of the Geisteswissenschaften, including such disciplines as philosophy, philology, politics and literature. By grouping them and clarifying their mutual relationships, he aimed to shed light on 'the most important components of our picture and knowledge of reality—our own personality as a life-unit, the external world, other individuals, their temporal life and their interactions.'

Today, as the workings of humanity are increasingly linked with the destruction wrought by the Anthropocene, 'the era of man,' we feel compelled to re-examine our links with human and other-than-human others ever more closely. Confronting numerous crises, hostilities and conflicts, as well as witnessing an unprecedented momentum of social, political, medical, technological and linguistic change, we are now facing the challenge of redefining our goals, policies and discourses within the field of the humanities yet again.

We welcome contributions addressing, but not limited to, the following topics:

- ▣ literary texts in political contexts;
- ▣ appropriating literary texts in political debates;
- ▣ narratives of crisis and crisis in the humanities;
- ▣ imperatives and agendas behind cross-cultural literary translations, adaptations and appropriations;
- ▣ workings of memory and trauma;
- ▣ ethics and the humanities;
- ▣ humanist perspectives in literary works;
- ▣ re(evaluation) of political and social discourses;
- ▣ discourses and communication related to war and conflict;
- ▣ (re)defining social identities in the age of rapid change;
- ▣ transgressing interspecies boundaries, including the perspectives of animal studies, plant humanities and beyond;
- ▣ humanistic approaches in language education;
- ▣ whole-person involvement in foreign language learning;
- ▣ teaching and testing English in the contemporary world;
- ▣ English in registers and genres of the modern era;
- ▣ position and perception of English in the 21st century;
- ▣ English in contact with other languages;
- ▣ linguistic landscapes and the global use of English;
- ▣ digital humanities in literary and linguistic studies.
